LA Times

Yorkshire, 1992. A wave of pit closures sweeps the North of England to devastating effect and the fate of the small mining community of Grimley hangs in the balance.

For Danny (PETE POSTLETHWAITE) a life-long pit miner and leader of the Grimley Colliery Brass Band, it's music that embodies the spirit of the mining community in which he lives, the very life-blood of its people. But as the spectre of mine closures looms large on the horizon, the band begins to seem like a luxury some of it's members can no longer afford.

The Grimley Colliery Brass Band prepare to cancel their first season in a century of band tradition when into their lives walks a woman who can turn their heads and lift their hearts. TARA FITZGERALD plays Gloria, a village girl who returns from London with all of that world's sophistication and independent spirit.

Gloria reignites the harmonies which the Colliery Band were once famous for, catching Danny's eye and inviting the embrace of childhood sweetheart Andy (EWAN MCGREGOR).

The Band are swept up in a new wave of enthusiasm which shakes the coal dust from the picture-postcard villages and inspires them to battle to win a place at the National Brass Band Championship contest in London.
